

CHT-15: PISTON COOLING SIMULATION USING JET IMPINGEMENT

Gus Nasif^{,§}, Ronald Barron^{} and Ram Balachandar^{*}

^{*}Mechanical, Automotive and Materials Engineering, University of Windsor,
Windsor, Ontario, Canada

[§]Correspondence author; Tel.: +519.819.2620, Email: nasifg@uwindsor.ca

ABSTRACT

A transient three-dimensional numerical investigation has been carried out to determine the piston cooling process due to oil jet impingement. It is shown that the cooling jet can significantly reduce the piston volume and surface average temperature. For larger nozzles and given Reynolds number, the piston average temperature is weakly dependent on the nozzle size.